Facebook includes the characters faceb00c. A quick DNS lookup of facebook.com confirms this. The domain resolves to 2a03:2880:2130:cf05:face:b00c::1.Faceb00c.

Facebook joined several other major Internet companies to adopt IPv6 in support of the World IPv6. This was a particularly big milestone for the Internet companies because without IPv6, the number of people and devices connecting to the Internet cannot continue to grow & developed. By creating new addresses, IPv6 is keep Facebook (and the Internet) fast, responsive, and reliable. IPv6 allows for more flexibly in Facebook network designs. Most software related to Facebook are worry about IPv6 and however everything is IPv4. IP addresses related to Facebook are not just integers. Since IPv4 is 32bits an IPv4 address can be converted to an integer and then subnetted and subjected to various IP address mathematics. Also IPv6 addresses cannot easily be compared as strings. The multiple ways every operating system in Facebook chooses to implement rfc5952, which defines the IPv6 text representation. Storage for IP addresses can also be an issue depending on string length and binary representation.

Facebook has been transitioning its data center infrastructure from IPv4 to IPv6. Facebook.com uses two software load balancers within the Facebook network are A Layer 4 load balancer (L4LB/shiv) that operates on TCP/IP and a Layer 7 load balancer (L7LB/proxygen) that operates on HTTP/HTTPS. In a dual-stacked cluster, a routable host IPv4 address is used as the BGP next-hop but an IPv6-only server does not have this. IPv4 request enters the Facebook network and is routed to the L4LB. Second the L4LB wraps the request in an IPv6 tunnel to send it to the chosen L7LB. The L4 and L7 LBs are not in the same rack which is because the tunnel cannot use IPv4 connection which is local and IPv6 is required. Finally the L7LB receives the request & decapsulates it which sends a response directly back to the client.

Facebook uses deployed dual-stack IPv4 and IPv6 support on its routers and that made no changes to its hosts in order to support IPv6.
